HISTORY REPEATED.

Men Who Have Made Their Marks and Marks Who Have Made Their Men.

Norfolk, Va., June 19, 1896.

Editor Virginian: That history repeats itself, we have received with the past few days added proof. One cannot help remembering in reading of the shaping of McKinley's destiny by the plutocrat Ohioan, Mark Hanna, that Caesar had his Mark (Antony) and William of Germany his (Bismarck), and the spectacle of Platt forcing Hanna, as the dispatches told, to swallow the gold plank in the Republican platform has also its parallel in the following bit of Roman history. Platt poses prettily as Orestes and the image of Hanna, as the late head that was forced to swallow the hot gold, which though good for him was none the less disagreeable, sticks to the memory like mucklage.

The head and hand of Cissus were sent to Orestes and the victorious Plutocrat soldiers were amused with a burlesque imitation of a Roman triumph. Orestes allied himself with the Armenian Artabazes and during the festivals that ensued the head of the murdered Crassus was introduced to give point to the declamation of an actor. Among other insults to this bloody trophy, the story runs, that molten gold was poured into the mouth of the avaricious Roman.
